Digital Health Essentials Micro-credential training

REFERENCE CASE

In late 2021 Dr. Audrey P Wang from the University of Sydney’s Faculty of Medicine and Health lead a cohort of participants on the inaugural Digital Health Essentials microcredential course.

This innovative education approach that blends self actuated learning, instructor lead sessions and collaborative participant workgroups, was designed to develop the participants critical thinking, planning and measurement skills in the rapidly burgeoning telehealth and virtual care fields.

CALVARY HEALTH CARE

Calvary Health, a leading care provider in Australia that leverages digital health technologies to provide virtual care models across community and hospital care, enabled several staff from different facets of the organisation to participate in order to rapidly develop enhanced understanding and skills in the digital health space.

FEEDBACK

Dr. Audrey Wang, the course lead, was exceptionally excited that the core objective of providing a collaborative experience for the participants was achieved.

Audrey commented that “When I logged onto the tutorial sessions the participants were already on-line and discussing the topics at hand. The amount of off-line collaboration was clearly apparent too, which meant that the participants were leveraging each others' insights and knowledge.”

Martin Bowles, CEO of Calvary Health Care is passionate about the place digital health will play in healthcare going forward.

“In Calvary’s care system we wrap ourselves around our patients, our residents and our clients to provide great service and holistic care. As we provide care today and into the future, especially with challenges such as Covid-19, the need for virtual care models accelerates. We at Calvary need to be at the forefront of digital health and having our people equipped for that challenge is key. So specialised professional development of our people in digital health is vital”, said Martin.

Kerryn Vine-Camp, the National Director People and Corporate Services at Calvary Health Care, was impressed by the level of engagement displayed by the participants, considering the time commitment required.

“Our people involved in the development of strategy and the management of our digital health initiatives gained great value from their time on the course”, said Kerryn.
